The octopus is often cast as a villainous monster in adventure movies. It is said to hide in dark places, waiting for unsuspecting divers to pull them to their deaths. In reality, the octopus is not a fearsome monster at all, rather it is an intelligent, timid and very interesting animal.

The octopus is not nearly as aggressive as it's close reality, the ten—armed squid. One octopus will indeed attack, and even sometimes cat another octopus that enters it's Territory, but divers report that it will usually try to avoid contact with man. Interestingly enough, however, octopi in captivity can become, very friendly with and will human company rather that avoid it.

Octopi are sometimes playful and clever. A naughty laboratory specimen waited for the technicians to leave the laboratory to make nightly trips to a nearby tank to eat fish. The technicians were mystified by the disappearance of the fish until they caught the octopus on one of its nightly raids.

Far from being a monster to be feared, the octopus is another of the interesting members of nature.
